

WALKER PASS

60 miles northeast of Bakersfield

John Charles Fremont, returning in 1844 from his second topographical expedition to California, suggested that this pass through the southern Sierra Nevada be named for Joseph R. Walker, explorer, fur trapper, and guide, who led the first immigrant wagon train through it into California in 1843. Native Americans had shown the still remote pass to Walker in 1834.